At the end of compulsory schooling, a quarter of European adolescents do not meet the minimal standards in reading literacy required for life-long learning and a satisfactory private and professional life (cf. the PISA-surveys). Funded by the European Commission (2006–2009), the ADORE Project "Teaching Struggling Adolescent Readers – A Comparative Study of Good Practice in European Countries" involved researchers and practitioners from the following 11 European countries: Austria, Belgium, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Italy, Norway, Poland, Romania, Switzerland. During a 2-year-investigation period, trans-national teams observed extraordinary examples of classroom instruction in all respective countries and identified key elements of good practice concerning reading instruction on different levels: classroom practice, schools, communities and national educational systems. The ADORE-book intends to be a guide for decision-makers and practitioners who want to improve the reading instruction for struggling adolescent readers

Content: Characteristics of Struggling Adolescent Readers in European Countries · Risk Factors and Explanatory Models · Description of the ADORE Project (research design and methodology) · Key Elements of Good Practice for Teaching Struggling Adolescent Readers: General Conditions, Key Elements for Changing Classroom Practice, Key Elements at School, Local and National Levels, Key Elements Not Yet to be Observed

Further information about the ADORE Project can be found on the Project's homepage: www.adore-project.eu. As one result the Project established an international "Adolescent Literacy Network"; information on its members, activities, and projects see: www.alinet.eu.
